David Character Essay

Character Analysis:

David's personality was presented as kind and generous. He participates in helping people and was a priest before he was introduced into the movie. He left the monastery after he fell in love with Toni, another character. The factors that contribute to his personality were his love for Toni and his desire to do good. These influenced him to help the people involved in immigration, and to join (and eventually leave) the monastery.

David's loving personality is what caused him to marry Toni, and to decide to leave the monastery. He probably also became a priest because of this aspect of himself, though his love for Toni overcame this and affected his life, as he now worked in different places and has become a part of this new family.

Someone going through personality changes should know that some events in our lives change things for us and that it's okay. You may think that you're devoted to one cause, that you have found your passion, and one thing comes along and changes that for you. This thing could be a newfound love, such as David and Toni, or something more simple such as a job offer or seeing a television show that affects you.

Reflection:

The not important aspect of the project for me was watching the movie initially. Watching this allowed me to see how close a family can be, and the toils that come along with that. It exposed me to shifting and altering personalities, and the effects of people's actions. This was very character based, and showed me how the character of someone affects their choices and how they're treated by others.

I can bring this back to pathways by sharing that character is something to be cherished and appreciated. Everyone has their own unique character, and it defines them as a person. The students should know that their actions reflect their character, and is what tells others of their values. They should know to make a good impression and demonstrate their good character whenever possible.
